Following the cross country spectators immediately moved over to the four cross course to watch the riders prepare for their competition. Over the course of an hour, 32 men were whittled down to four riders for the final.

The two men who appeared to be the strongest were UCI World Champion and defending World Cup champion Rafael Alvarez de Lara Lucas (Specialized Factory Team) and Australian Jared Graves (Yeti Fox Shox Factory), the fastest qualifier. Both easily moved through the heats to reach the final, along with former world champion Michal Prokop of the Czech Republic and Roger Rinderknecht of the Netherlands.

Alvarez had problems in the first turn of the final, dropping back to third behind Prokop. Graves once again took over the front spot to claim the win and the series leader's jersey for the first time in his career.

"I think my downhill background helped on this course," said Graves. "I like the high speed stuff, so this suited me well. The jersey will certainly drive me in my training for the next World Cup."
